Jun 18, 2016 Windows 7 Loader v1.7.7 (REPACK) By Daz (x86 & x64).Q: What does type :A::B mean in C++? Can someone explain what does type :A::B mean in C++? #include struct A { void foo(); }; struct B : private A { void foo(); }; int main(int argc, char argv) { A a; B b; a.foo(); b.foo(); return 0; } This code produces the error: no matching function for call to 'A::foo()' Obviously this type of error comes up if the B inherits directly from an A class member. But what does type :A::B mean? Does it mean a B class that has the private inheritance of an A class member? A: A reference to a base class member is a qualified name. E.g. struct A { void foo(); }; struct B : private A { void foo(); }; using A::foo; This takes a name and expands it as a reference. So it would be the same as writing: B().foo(); Which is not what you want. Cordless tools of this kind are also known from EP 1489798 B2. The cordless tool disclosed in this
